Overall, the SDGs show little change in substantive, ideological or implementation approach from the previous Millennium Development Goals (MDGs). They are largely a reassertion of 19th and early 20th century European colonial". You: public administration

- The document discusses public administration in the context of the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) and critiques their effectiveness and alignment with professional standards. It highlights that the SDGs lack clear problem statements, root cause analyses, and logical frameworks necessary for effective public policy. The SDGs are described as an aggregated list of interventions without prioritization or strategies, which undermines their potential.

You: What is this about?

Here are key points from the text: The document discusses the impact of climate change on Least Developed Countries (LDCs) and examines whether the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) can be achieved in this context. It highlights how climate change undermines LDCs' ability to meet various SDGs, emphasizing the need for increased ambition in climate action and development financing. The document outlines the specific challenges posed by climate change to poverty eradication, food security, health, education, gender equality, infrastructure, and other critical areas, suggesting that without significant changes in policy and support, achieving the SDGs will be exceedingly difficult for LDCs.

The article text visible in the preview window includes: "Conferences to discuss efforts related to those treaties year after year, such as the 21 annual Conference of the Parties (COP) to the U.N.'s Framework on Climate Change (UNFCCC, 1992) and the 11th Conference of the Parties to the 1997 Kyoto Protocol, led to mass public demonstrations worldwide in 2016 and continual criticism and disillusionment if not claims of 'fraud' (Milman, 2015). Are the SDGs just another set of unenforceable 'goals' talking the talk of 'sustainability' but not taking the needed actions? Even if there is commitment, what will they actually achieve?" and "There are standards in public administration, law and managerial accounting that specify what makes plans and 'action plans' actionable and enforceable (Emmanuel, Merchant and Otley, 1990; Garrison, Noreen and Brewer, 2005; Seidman and Seidman, 1990)."
